Kessler Topaz Meltzer & Check, LLP (“Kessler Topaz”) Announces Investigation Concerning Mortgage Service Payment Fees

Kessler Topaz is investigating whether certain banks and/or loan servicers (collectively “Loan Servicers”) engaged in a scheme to generate illicit profits by charging borrowers improper and/or excessive fees for property inspections, appraisals, foreclosure auctions, title examinations and other fees, sometimes when borrowers become delinquent in their mortgage payments.

About Loan Servicers

In most circumstances, home buyers borrow money from a bank or financial institution to purchase a house. Following the transaction, often immediately, the loan “servicing” rights (collecting the monthly payments, allocating interest and principal, managing escrow accounts for insurance costs and property taxes, etc.) are transferred to a Loan Servicer. Use of Loan Servicers are often part of the mortgage contract between the original lender, bank or financial institution and the borrower.

Kessler Topaz is investigating whether certain Loan Servicers engaged in a scheme to systematically force borrowers, some of whom are delinquent with their mortgage payments, to incur additional and unnecessary fees or grossly overcharge for services.

Below is a list of Loan Servicers that Kessler Topaz is currently investigating.

- Bank of America
- BB&T Mortgage
- Capital One Financial
