CASE BACKGROUND:

Ramaco is a critical minerals producer that engages in mining, developing, and selling coal and other rare earth minerals. Historically, Ramaco focused primarily on coal, but in 2025 pivoted more heavily into rare earth minerals with its Brook Mine, located in Wyoming.

The complaint alleges that, throughout the Class Period, Defendants made materially false and/or misleading statements, as well as failed to disclose material facts about the company's business, operations, and prospects. Specifically, Defendants misrepresented and/or failed to disclose that: (1) the company had not started any significant mining activity at the Brook Mine after breaking ground in July of 2025; (2) the progress at Brook Mine was underdeveloped to the extent that there was no active work being done at the Brook Mine; and (3) as a result of the foregoing, Defendants' statements about the company's business, operations, and prospects were materially false and misleading and/or lacked a reasonable basis at all relevant times.

THE LEAD PLAINTIFF PROCESS:

The Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995 permits any investor who purchased or acquired Ramaco securities during the Class Period to seek appointment as lead plaintiff in the Ramaco class action lawsuit. A lead plaintiff is a representative party that acts on behalf of other class members in directing the litigation. In order to be appointed lead plaintiff, the Court must determine that the class member's claim is typical of the claims of other class members, and that the class member will adequately represent the class. Your ability to share in any recovery is not, however, affected by the decision whether or not to serve as a lead plaintiff. Filling out our online form or communicating with any counsel is not necessary to participate or share in any recovery achieved in this
