Lead plaintiff motions must be filed with the court no later than January 12, 2026.

CASE BACKGROUND:

Stride is a technology company that provides an educational platform for students participating in online learning. Throughout the Class Period, Stride touted that it was "one of the nation's most successful technology-based education companies" and that its "Idleep educational, regulatory, and policy expertise" in the United States.

The complaint alleges that, throughout the Class Period, Defendants made materially false and/or misleading statements, as well as failed to disclose material facts about the company's business, operations, and prospects. Specifically, Defendants misrepresented and/or failed to disclose that: (1) Stride was inflating student enrollment numbers by retaining "ghost students" on the rolls to secure more state funding, while also losing existing and potential enrollments; (2) teachers were assigned caseloads far beyond statutory limits as Stride cut staffing costs; (3) Stride failed to comply with certain requirements including employee background checks and license laws, as well as federally mandated special education services for students; (4) whistleblowers that documented financial directives from Stride's leadership to delay hiring and deny services were suppressed; and (5) as a result of the foregoing, Defendants' statements about the company's business, operations, and prospects were materially false and misleading and/or lacked a reasonable basis at all relevant times.

THE LEAD PLAINTIFF PROCESS:

The Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995 permits any investor who purchased or acquired Stride securities during the Class Period to seek appointment as lead plaintiff in the Stride class action lawsuit. A lead plaintiff is a representative party that acts on behalf of other class members in directing the litigation. In order to be appointed lead plaintiff, the Court must determine that the class member's claim is typical of the claims of other class members, and that the class member will adequately represent the class. Your ability to share in any recovery is not, however, affected by the decision whether or
